Peak Body calls on all sides of government to stay focused

Thursday, 14 November 2019

Following the passionate discussion in parliament today about the merits of pill testing, the Alcohol, Tobacco and other Drugs Council of Tasmania is calling on all sides of government to remain focused on the one thing they all agree on – implementing strategies at Tasmanian festivals and events that reduce the harm of illicit drugs.

“Our organisation stands behind our position that there is sufficient evidence to support the trial of pill testing / drug-checking services at Tasmanian festivals and events and we welcome Minister Rockliff’s commitment to consider the forthcoming independent pill testing evaluation from the Australian National University,” Ms Lai said.

“It is evident that this topic continues to be very divisive and there’s a clear need for continued discussion and debate to increase awareness of the evidence and address the ongoing misunderstandings that persist about how the health services works.

“In the meantime, it is of key concern to us is that while this debate continues, it may be potentially distracting the government from considering what other measures could or should be put in place to minimise the harm of illicit drug use during the upcoming festival season, which is just weeks away.

“We are aware that Falls Festival, alongside their medical team have been exceptionally proactive in preparing for this year’s event and we commend them for the forward-planning that they’ve undertaken.

“We are mindful that the decision by the festival to fine-tune and bolster their existing processes will result in additional costs to the festival, and we will be calling on the Tasmanian Government to consider how they can assist with those costs.

“The independent review from the Australian National University is due to be released in the coming weeks.”
